■ Editorial

Welcome to the April edition of the ITIA Bulletin. Hardly a day seems to go by without more harrowing news of violence in Iraq and in this month's issue we feature an article by ITIA member and Chair of the FIT Human Rights Committee Michael Friel on the plight of translators in the region.

Aside from that we have a report on the highly successful postgraduate translation studies conference held at DCU in March, along with news of lots of forthcoming conferences and courses. Of particular note in this respect is the new MPhil in Literary Translation which will be offered in Trinity here in Dublin from August onwards.

From next month we will be starting a new reviews section of translation books. While priority will be given to books with an Irish interest, no book relating to translation will be ruled out. So if you know of a book deserving of a review, or if you would like to write a review, do get in touch.

Best wishes,

John Kearns

■ Translators Targeted in Iraq

March was a dramatic month for Iraqi translators and interpreters. While there has been a series of casualties in the profession since the invasion began, the deaths were usually the result of ambushes or crossfire situations in which the interpreters were not the targets. That has now changed as the armed opposition has deliberately begun targeting, not only Iraqis working with the occupying forces, but also those employed by the foreign media.

Early in March, Selwan Abdelghani Medhi al-Niemi, an Iraqi who worked as a freelance translator in Baghdad for the Voice of America, was shot to death by unknown assailants while driving home from a relative's house. His mother and young daughter also died in the attack.

Then on March 24th, Omar Hashim Kamal, a translator who had been working for Time magazine since the beginning of the conflict was shot four times by unknown assailants on his way to work and died shortly afterwards.

■ Prix de l'Ambassade

French Translation Bursary

The Cultural Service of the French Embassy and the Irish Translators' and Interpreters' Association are jointly awarding a travel bursary to an Irish-based translator who is translating a French author into Irish or English. The bursary will be administered by the Irish Translators' and Interpreters' Association.

The purpose of the bursary is to cover the translator's subsistence costs if he / she needs to travel to France, either to consult with the author being translated or to carry out other related research.

Translators who wish to apply for the bursary should apply directly to the ITIA. Further information may be obtained from the ITIA Secretary at secretary-itia\(a\)ntlworld.comntlworld.com) and full details will shortly be available on www.translatorsassociation.ie.

The closing date for applications is 30th June 2004.

In a rare acknowledgement of the contribution of our profession, Time stated: "Covering the world each week would be impossible without the translators, drivers, facilitators and guides whose local knowledge and companionship are indispensable to foreign correspondents working in dangerous places," adding that "his death underscored the dangers faced by Iraqi employees of news organizations. At least six others have been killed in the line of duty in the past month." What the jobs of these other employees was is not stated, but Reuters has also reported that "Iraqis working as translators and cleaners for the occupiers have been repeatedly targeted by guerrillas in Iraq, but no death toll is available."

In January, Duraid Isa Mohammed, a 27-year-old translator and producer employed by CNN, died from multiple gunshot wounds in Iraq at the end of January when the crew he was travelling with was ambushed.

Interpreters working for the military are also being targeted deliberately. A woman translator for the U.S. military was killed and two of her relatives were wounded in the northern city of Mosul in March while the deaths of other anonymous interpreters are frequently mentioned as an afterthought in reports of casualties among ambushed troops.

■ Report: The First DCU Postgraduate Translation Studies Conference

The first DCU Postgraduate Translation Studies Conference was held on March 26th and 27th this year. This major new event for DCU, organised by postgraduate students at the Centre for Translation and Textual Studies (CTTS) and supported by the CTTS and the Irish Translators' and Interpreters' Association, saw nearly 30 postgraduate students from twelve different countries giving presentations on a wide range of topics relating to translation.

The conference featured panels devoted to various aspects of the relationships between translation and film, education, literature, gender, and technology. To mark this year's accession of ten new states to the EU, there was a special emphasis on work concerning translation issues of languages of EU accession states in a global context and there were a number of speakers presenting papers on Eastern European topics. Hanna Stochnialek of Warsaw University spoke about translations of the Polish journalist Ryszard Kapuscinski into Mexican and peninsular Spanish, while Charles Sabatos of the University of Michigan discussed English translations of the Czech writer John Amos Comenius. One paper which was listened to with great local interest was that by Lukasz Kaczmarek of the Kazimierz Wielki Academy in Bydgoszcz, Poland, who discussed the training of Polish community interpreters – a highly topical issue, given the recent announcement of a new Graduate Certificate Programme in Community Interpreting at DCU.

Also of local interest was Rita McCann's fascinating account of the TRASNA and TrasnABio programmes being carried out at CTTS (see the February issue of the ITIA Bulletin for further details). Rita's highly entertaining presentation focussed in particular on Siegfried Trebitsch's German translations of George Bernard Shaw as one example of the fascinating data which the CTTS projects are unearthing. Ireland's heritage in literary translation was also represented by ITIA member Marco Sonzogni of UCD, who spoke about Beckett's translations of the Italian poet Montale.

The DCU postgraduate community themselves were well represented by Mary Ann Kenny (speaking on on-line translator training), Johann Roturier (on machine translatability), and Sharon O'Brien (on methodologies for monitoring post-editing activity). These presentations, combined with the work of those DCU postgrads who organised the conference, confirmed the status of the DCU Centre for Translation and Textual Studies as the leading centre for translation research in Ireland.

Selecting highlights from among the many fascinating contributions to the conference is difficult, but among those presentations which were of particular interest for this reviewer were Ibon Uribarri Zenekorta's account of Basque translations of German and Christine Demaecker's cognitive linguistic account of the translation of wine metaphors. Literary translation was particularly well represented, with papers on the translation of Virginia Woolf (Elena Minelli and Annarita Taronna), Esther Tusquets and Rosa Montero (Helena Miguélez-Carballeira), literary translation in Taiwanese periodicals (Kenneth S. H. Liu), and the translation of British chick lit. (Anne-Lise Feral). Translation for children was placed firmly on the Translation Studies map, with contributions by Michal Borodo on Polish translations of Alice in Wonderland, and Svenja Wurm on English translations of Kästner's Emil and the Detectives. Gender and translation was the subject of very interesting talks by Elena Basile (on translation and psychoanalytic theory) and Eliana Maestri (on Jeanette Winterson's Oranges are Not the Only Fruit). Finally, corpus translation studies were represented by Arianne Reimerink of the University of Granada (on corpus analysis for scientific writing and translation) and Silvia Cacchiani of the University of Pisa (on the translation of patient information leaflets).

The conference was addressed by two specially invited guest speakers: Dr. María Calzada Pérez of the Universitat Jaume I who spoke on "The Translation Scholar's (In)visibility" and Dr. Beatriz Méndez- Cendón of the Universidad de Valladolid speaking on concordance analysis of medical text genres. Closing speeches were given by Prof. Michael Cronin and Prof. Jenny Williams of DCU and a wine reception at the Irish Writers' Centre followed on the Saturday evening.

The success of the conference was marked by the hope voiced by many that it will become a regular event in the DCU calendar. Full details of the conference programme are still available on the website: www.ctts.dcu.ie/conference.

■ ITIA Open Day 2004

Irish Writers' Centre, 19 Parnell Square, Dublin 1
Saturday, 29th May 2004, 10.00 to 14.00 hours.

An invitation to the ITIA Open Day 2004 is extended to non-members of the Irish Translators' and Interpreters' Association.

This is an opportunity for those at college or university to meet with members of the ITIA – translators and interpreters alike – as to the professional career fields, to obtain documentation and to avail of an invitation to join the ITIA.

It is also an opportunity for those who have a general interest in the fields of interpreting and translation to meet our members, and to obtain information about the organisation which represents translators and interpreters in Ireland.

Refreshments will be served with the compliments of the ITIA during the morning.

Further information contact: secretary-itia\(a\)ntlworld.comntlworld.com)

■ Next Issue of the ITIA Bulletin

The next issue of the ITIA Bulletin will be out on or after May 15th 2004. So if you have any contributions, news, suggestions, or something you'd like to share, send them to me, John Kearns, at kearns\(a\)pro.onet.plpro.onet.pl).

■ “A Celebration of Translation”

*Irish Writers' Centre, 19 Parnell Square, Dublin 1
Thursday, 20th May 2004, 18.30 to 21.00 hours.*

An invitation is extended to ITIA members, who have in the past year 2003-2004 translated a book or had a translation published, to come and talk to the broader ITIA membership on the experience.

It is also an opportunity for a translator or interpreter who has been engaged in a particular project to bring the membership up to date on current activities and trends in translation and interpreting.

Those who wish to be a participant as a speaker on the evening should contact michael.mccann(a)infomarex.ie in the first instance.

“A Celebration of Translation” is usually followed by a wine and cheese reception and the event is an opportunity to bring a friend (or a possible future member) to see the ITIA in celebration, yet also in a relaxed social atmosphere.

In order to calculate the number of non-speakers, R.S.V.P. to

Brian Tobin 01-872-1302 or send a confirming e-mail to brian\(a\)writerscentre.iewriterscentre.ie)

■ Elections 2004

As many ITIA members are foreign nationals resident in Ireland, we thought it might be worth pointing out electoral entitlements in the forthcoming elections in Ireland on June 11th 2004. Citizens of all nationalities who are officially resident in Ireland are entitled to vote in local elections and all EU citizens are entitled to vote in the European elections. You can check the register of electors at your local Garda station, post office or library – there's still time to register if you're not on it.

More information on the Irish electoral system can be found by clicking on the ‘What We Do’ link at the website of the Department of the Environment: www.environ.ie.

■ Brian Hughes – Memorial Publication

The Department of English Studies at the University of Alicante (Spain) has decided to publish a special volume dedicated to the memory of Dr. Brian Hughes and edited by Dr. Jose Mateo and Dr. Francisco Yus. Articles in all the different fields of English Studies are welcome, with special emphasis on those subjects which were addressed by Dr. Brian Hughes: (1) Irish literature, (2) translation, (3) lexicography, and (4) legal and business discourse.

The volume will be in English. Authors should follow the guidelines for the submission of manuscripts which can be found at:

<http://www.ua.es/dfing/publicaciones/raei/general/instrucciones.htm>

Those interested in sending a manuscript for publication should send one printed copy of the manuscript (double-spaced) plus a computer disk (3'5") or CD with an exact copy, either in Word format (97, 2000, XP) or WordPerfect format (5.1, 5.2, 6.0, 6.1, 7.0, 8, 9). Another copy of the electronic file should be sent as an e-mail attachment to any of the following addresses: francisco.yus\(a\)ua.esua.es) / jose.mateo\(a\)ua.esua.es).

The deadline for the submission of manuscripts is September 15th, 2004 (maybe even a few days later if there is a justified delay). The editors will not accept articles which have also been sent to other publications or have already been published. The authors will receive a free copy of the volume.

Please, send your manuscripts to:

■ Conferences & Courses

M.Phil in Literary Translation at Trinity College Dublin

Trinity College, which has the oldest Modern Languages departments of any university in the world (1776), is launching a new one-year postgraduate course in literary translation. The new M.Phil will run for the first time from October 2004 to September 2005.

Assessment will be by submitted essay, translation portfolio and dissertation. The common language is English. Source languages include French, Italian, Spanish, German, Russian, Czech, Latin and Greek.

Candidates should possess a good degree in at least one language, or a degree plus proven language competence, or experience at a suitable level as a translator or writer.

The programme aims to teach the art of translation (including creative, cultural, academic and philosophical translation), and to form professionals who will have learned to work in an ethos of mutual intellectual and linguistic exchange.

The M Phil contains a core course which looks at translation history and addresses theoretical, linguistic and practical issues common to most translation situations. In addition, there are specialised options specific to individual countries and periods. It is hoped to offer options on ancient texts, on the classic novel, and on translating medieval and contemporary literature, from a variety of angles, including practical issues of translation and the comparative approach. Students might alternatively wish to take advanced undergraduate options in those language departments which have agreed to permit this.

www.tcd.ie/arts_letters/translation

Application forms can be downloaded from:

www.tcd.ie/Graduate_Studies/g-admisn.htm

and should be returned to Postgraduate Studies Office, Trinity College, Dublin 2, Ireland, no later than 1st June 2004.

Text, Discourse, and Corpora: Corpora in Linguistics and Related Fields: A short intensive course14th - 19th September 2004

Corpus linguistics has opened new ways of studying and describing language and corpora continue to offer innovative paths in various fields. In addition to general aspects of corpus linguistics, this course gives special emphasis to meaning in texts as units of discourse.

The course is a joint project by the Tuscan Word Centre and the University of Saarbruecken

Dates: September 14th - 19th 2004

Place: Medienzentrum, Saarland University, Saarbruecken, Germany

Topic leaders:

- ◆ Prof. John Sinclair (TWC Italy)
- ◆ Prof. Wolfgang Teubert (University of Birmingham)
- ◆ Michaela Mahlberg (Saarland University)

Guest lecturers:

- ◆ Prof. Michael Stubbs (University of Trier)
- ◆ Prof. Erich Steiner (Saarland University)
- ◆ Dr. Silvia Hansen-Schirra (Saarland University)

The course will give an overview of the main topics in corpus work, e.g. corpus design and compilation, research tools, corpus linguistic approaches to the description of language, monolingual and multilingual corpora, applied corpus linguistics (ELT, translation studies, literary studies, etc.). On the one hand the course aims to provide a basis that will prove useful to the individual work of participants. On the other hand, the course offers a forum to discuss innovative approaches in corpus linguistics and to establish interdisciplinary links. A recent development in corpus linguistics is the application to text linguistics and discourse studies. In this area the course will present cutting-edge research. A corpus linguistic approach to the properties of texts will illustrate how corpora can provide a link between different research fields concerned with language. The expertise of international lecturers ensures a high-level course and intensive coverage of the topics.

Translation Summer School for Practising TranslatorsLondon Metropolitan UniversityMonday 28th June to Friday 9th July 2004

London Metropolitan University is offering an international translation summer school for practising translators, translation and language students and for linguists with an interest in translation from Monday 28 June to Friday 9 July 2004.

This is a two-week intensive course of two fully accredited modules from the BA Applied Translation. These can be taken individually or together. The teaching consists of a mixture of lectures, seminars, workshops with language specific work and computer-based work.

The two modules give participants the opportunity to increase their knowledge in two specific areas:

- ♦ translation and culture
- ♦ electronic translation tools (incl. translation memory)

BCLT Fifth International Literary Translation Summer SchoolNorwich, England4th-10th July 2004

The Fifth International Literary Translation Summer School will take place in Norwich, England, from 4th to 10th July 2004. The Summer School is an opportunity for writers, translators, other literary professionals – indeed anybody interested in the practice of literary translation – to work closely together over a period of a week. The School is structured around workshops in small groups led by experienced translators and working intensively on a short text, supplemented by round tables, talks and seminars on issues relating to literary translation. Confirmed participants for this year include the novelists Andrew Cowan (England), Luisa Etxenike (Spain) and Annette Pehnt (Germany), the poet George Szirtes (England), and the translators Rossella Bernascone and Ilide Carmignani (Italy) and Anne McLean and Georgina Paul, both based in England. A more detailed list of participants along with hard copy publicity will be available shortly. The Summer School costs £595 including accommodation, subsistence, and tuition. Some limited funding is available for part-bursaries. The Summer School is open to translators into all languages and to anybody interested in the practice of literary translation.

6th Biennial Conference of the Association for Machine Translation in the Americas (AMTA-2004): "From Real Users to Research."

What do industrial and business sector players think about Machine Translation (MT)? The theme of the 6th Biennial Conference of the Association for Machine Translation in the Americas (AMTA-2004) is "From Real Users to Research."

The conference will explore "user needs" and how market requirements can feed into software research and development programs. MT users at AMTA-2002 emphasized that the major obstacles to MT deployment relate to integratability and how much customization work still needs to be done once the product is installed in-house. Can advances in research be applied here? Can NLP techniques be applied to computer-aided translation tools which may appeal to translators more than fully automatic MT?

AMTA-2004 seeks to engage the research and development community on these and other issues which often fall outside the agenda of the MT and NLP research community. We encourage experienced users (and potential users) of MT systems from the business and industrial sectors, to come voice their opinions at AMTA-2004. There are opportunities to actively participate in the form of conference papers, round table/panel sessions, workshops and tutorials. Based on interest, we would even like to have informal discussion meetings and a formal "wish-list" session in which requirements can be collectively gathered, presented, prioritized and voted upon in the presence of the MT development groups. The way to improve the future of MT products for your current and future needs is to come and make your requirements be heard.

9th National Translation Forum and the 3rd Brazilian International Translation Forum
2nd CALL FOR PAPERS - DEADLINE FOR SENDING PROPOSALS EXTENDED TO 17th MAY

ABRAPT (the Brazilian Association of Translation Researchers) and the State University of Ceará (UECE) are pleased to announce The 9th National Translation Forum and the 3rd Brazilian International Translation Forum
30th August - 3rd September 2004

Media, Teaching and Translation

New communication and information technologies allow man to overcome barriers of time and space. Translation also plays an important role in this task. The conference aims to bring academics and students together with experts in the field in order to discuss the many aspects involved in the translation for the media, in the relationship between translation and language teaching, in the teaching of translation, and in the theoretical issues raised by these discussions in the different sub-areas of translation studies.

Ponta Mar Hotel, Fortaleza, Ceará, Brazil, 30th August - 3rd September 2004

The congress will be held in Fortaleza, capital of the state of Ceará in the Northeast of Brazil, a pleasant beach resort with a hot, dry climate. Very economical packages including flight and hotel can be obtained to Fortaleza from many European cities.

The State University of Ceará is a leading university in the northeast of Brazil.

The congress will cover the following sub-areas of translation studies

1. Literary Translation and Historiography
2. Post-structuralism
3. Media
4. Terminology
5. Teaching and evaluation
6. Discourse
7. Corpus Linguistics
8. Interpretation

Visiting speakers will include Jorge Díaz Cintas (Surrey Roehampton), Ana Ballester (Granada), Sue Atkins & Michael Rundell (Brighton), Belinda Maia (Porto), Ana Frankenberg-Garcia (ISLA, Lisbon), Arnt Lykke Jakobsen (Copenhagen Business School), Amparo Hurtado (Autónoma de Barcelona), Malcolm Coulthard (Birmingham) and Franz Pöchhacker (Vienna).

The Congress will take place at the same time of the 6th Ceará Book Exhibition and some activities will be held jointly.

Registration

To submit a paper to the Conference, please send title and abstract (max. 300 words, single-spaced, Times New Roman 12) by May 17th, 2004.

Papers may be given in Portuguese, English, Spanish and French.

Please specify in which area of the conference you wish your paper to be included.

Deadlines and Fees

Participants from abroad will be charged a flat fee of $US100 or EUR100 to be paid on arrival.
