Editorial

Dear Readers,

I am delighted to welcome you all to the first issue of the ITIA bulletin under my editorship.

I want to wish the outgoing editor, John Kearns, the very best of luck in his future endeavors and to thank him for his ongoing help and support. The success of the bulletin is testament to his hard work and commitment. My main aim for the moment is to maintain the high standards set by John and founding editor Jody Byrne. Any developments made to the bulletin will be a continuation of the solid work that has gone before.

To readers, I hope you will continue to enjoy the bulletin and also to contribute any interesting information that you feel is relevant to others. The bulletin aims to keep you informed as to what is going on in the world of translation, so without your involvement and interest, it would become little more than a weblog! You may notice a slight difference in the layout of the bulletin as I am producing it in a different publishing program. There may be some technical hiccups this month (particularly with hyperlinks), but bear with me and it should be fixed for next month's edition.

It has been an exciting month here in Dublin with two big events - Professor Jin Di was made an honorary member of the ITIA at a ceremony, which was attended by, among others, the Chinese ambassador to Ireland. Also the Second DCU International Postgraduate Translation Studies Conference was a tremendous success. More about that on Page 5.

Enjoy this month's edition.

Translation Ireland, Summer 2005

ITIA member and chair of the FIT (International Federation of Translators) Human Rights Committee, Michael Friel, will be guest-editing a special issue of Translation Ireland to be published in early summer 2005 dedicated to human rights as they affect our profession.

It is hoped to cover as many aspects of the subject as possible. These range from colleagues being murdered/imprisoned/executed for doing their work, to others being bullied and harassed by barristers/officials, and simply to situations in which translators/interpreters become witnesses (sometimes impotently and sometimes to their own horror) to appalling abuses of the rights of others.

This issue of Translation Ireland, rather than being academically oriented, will focus above all on translators/interpreters as human beings with feelings.

A primary purpose of this is to gather as many views/experiences as possible ahead of the FIT meeting in Finland this August in order to establish a basis for debate on the rights/responsibilities of our profession from which the HR committee can propose universal ground-rules for the assurance and protection of the professionalism, responsibilities, rights and dignity of all those who practice our profession.

The deadline for submission of final contributions is mid-May.

All enquiries to be directed to Michael Friel at mfriel(a)iol.ie

■ Joining the ITIA

The Irish Translators' & Interpreters' Association is always delighted to welcome new members to the Association.

There are five categories of membership:

- Ordinary
- Professional
- Corporate
- Concession (undergraduate and senior citizen)
- Honorary

Ordinary membership is open to anyone with an interest in translating or interpreting. Professional membership is for those who meet strict criteria set by the professional membership committee of the ITIA and which is part of the drive to raise the status of the profession in the European market.

Corporate membership is for firms and agencies associated with the profession while concession membership is for undergraduate students engaged in third level language and/or translation studies and senior citizens. Finally, honorary membership is intended for national and international persons who have distinguished themselves in our professional field.

For more information on how to join as well as for the relevant application forms, visit the ITIA website at:
www.translatorsassociation.ie

■ ITIA Certification Workshop

The ITIA is currently working on a certification procedure that would entitle Professional Members of the ITIA, whose main area of expertise includes the translation of legal or official documents, to seek the status of 'ITIA Certified Translator'. All successful applicants will be issued with an ITIA Certified Translator's Certificate and two stamps to be used for the certification of translations.

ITIA also intends to promote this category of Membership by informing various government departments, state institutions, court services, solicitors, embassies, etc. about the availability of this service in the Republic of Ireland.

The ITIA Certification Sub-committee is organising a workshop for Professional Members who wish to learn more about the practical aspects of the Certification procedure. The workshop will take place on May 7th in the Irish Writers' Centre from 2:00 to 4:00.

For more information contact Bassia Bannister of the Certification sub-committee: bannister\(a\)eir-com.neteir-com.net)

■ Jin Di becomes honorary member of ITIA

March 31st and April 1st saw an important event in the calendars of both Dublin City University and the Irish Translators' and Interpreters' Association (ITIA): the visit of Prof. Jin Di to Ireland to receive honorary membership of the ITIA and to give an open lecture at the Second DCU International Postgraduate Translation Studies Conference.

Though famous for his work as both a teacher and translation theorist, it is for his translation of James Joyce's Ulysses that Professor Jin is best known. A full account of his epic, 16-year task of translating the masterpiece is available at <http://www.ctts.dcu.ie/pg-ulysses.htm>. Now aged 84, he remains sprightly and continues to work as a translator. His latest project is the translation of his late friend Richard Ellmann's biography of James Joyce.

The Thursday evening ceremony was held in the Irish Writers' Centre on Parnell Square and was introduced by ITIA Chairperson and DCU lecturer Annette Schiller, who welcomed Professor Jin to Dublin. This was then followed by a brief account of Professor Jin's life and work given by John Kearns, also of the ITIA and the Centre for Translation and Textual Studies at DCU. Next, the Ambassador of the People's Republic of China to Ireland, His Excellency Dr Sha Hailin spoke of the importance of Jin Di's work to the improvement of Sino-Irish relations and commended him for his translation, not just of Ulysses, but of many other literary works and for his contribution to the theory of literary translation in works such as Literary Translation: Quest for Artistic Integrity (which was available on the evening courtesy of Jin Di's publisher Ken Baker of St. Jerome Press, who had travelled from Manchester for the occasion).

Finally, Professor Jin was conferred with honorary membership and presented with a certificate, the citation on which acknowledged his "creative and scholarly achievements, especially his translation of James Joyce's Ulysses into Chinese, adding a new universal dimension to a work of Irish and European culture." He gratefully acknowledged the honour and then gave a fascinating and highly entertaining lecture entitled "Literature and Exoticism" featuring many examples quoted from his own translation of Ulysses. The theme of the lecture centred on a reassessment of the notion of 'dynamic equivalence' associated with Professor Jin's collaborator, the renowned translation theorist Eugene Nida. The talk was warmly received.

The following day, Professor Jin addressed an audience of around a hundred delegates and others at an open plenary lecture at DCU held as part of the Second DCU International Postgraduate Translation Studies Conference. The title of this lecture was "The Paradox of Creative Translation" and the subject was an examination of a specific kind of creativity in literary translation, the kind that produces a text which contains material apparently different from those in the source text. In what proved to be a fascinating talk, Professor Jin posed questions such as "Are all 'creative translations' justifiable?", "What exactly are the situations that call for such 'creative translations'?", and most specifically "How can one create translations that are apparently different from the original and yet manage to carry the sophisticated and sometimes extremely elusive qualities of the original art over to the readers in the new language as closely as possible?" The complications involved in addressing these issues were illustrated with examples chosen from his two recent books Shamrock and Chopsticks: Joyce in China, a Tale of Two Encounters (Hong Kong: City University of Hong Kong Press, 2001) and the aforementioned Literary Translation: Quest for Artistic Integrity (Manchester: St. Jerome, 2003). Again the lecture was warmly received and provided much material for discussion at the conference dinner in the Helix afterwards, at which Professor Jin provided further entertaining discussion of his work and ideas. Both of the above events were organised and co-funded by the DCU Postgraduate Society, the Centre for Translation and Textual Studies at DCU, and by the Irish Translators' and Interpreters' Association.

Conference Report: The Second International Postgraduate Translation Studies Conference, Dublin City University.

The Second International Postgraduate Translation Studies Conference took place at Dublin City University on April 1st and 2nd. Following the huge success of last year's event, this year's conference was even bigger and saw nearly 50 delegates from twenty different countries speak on a variety of topics generally related to language mediation.

Opening the conference was one of the three plenary speakers, Jan Blommaert from the University of Ghent, who gave a lecture which I later heard one delegate describe as 'gripping': "His Master's Voice" on linguistic prejudices influencing judgements on the applications of African asylum seekers in Belgium - a topic of particular relevance here in Ireland at the moment. This was then followed by the first two of the morning's parallel sessions: "Postcolonial Identities in Translation" and "Translating the Novel". The latter session, chaired by Cormac Ó Cuilleain of Trinity College Dublin, featured three highly stimulating papers on the translation of Tolstoy, Henry James, and James Joyce, all of which generated much discussion among the audience. It was particularly encouraging to see three speakers from countries which hitherto have tended to be less frequently represented at translation studies conferences in Ireland: Russia, Poland, and Brazil.

Of course, with so many speakers in such a short space of time, the most any of us could get was a mere taste of what was on offer. Highlights for this particular reviewer from the first day's papers were Mary Ann Kenny's groundbreaking research on on-line translator training at DCU, Monika Linke on Henry James in Polish translation, Johann Roturier's discussion of the possibilities of combining translation memories with machine translation, Alberto Orengo's highly relevant account of objectivity in news translation, and Iwona Paskal's paper "Translation and Glocalization: English-language Magazines Localized for the Polish Reader".

Regular readers of the Bulletin will be familiar with the TRASNA and TRASNA Bio projects currently underway at DCU and Caoimhghin Ó Croidheáin gave another interesting account of the ongoing work on the project on Friday evening. That session, chaired by the eminent translation theorist Gideon Toury, also saw another presentation on a large-scale translation research initiative, this time by Cristina Gómez Castro concerning the development of the TRACEni project in Spain which is looking at the censorship of translation under Franco. Finally, Friday evening saw the highlight of the conference, the plenary lecture by Jin Di.

Saturday morning began with more parallel sessions on audio-visual translation and translating the theatre, followed by other sessions on the translation of verse, linguistic issues in translation, interpreting and localization, translating science fiction and fantasy, translation and philosophy, and translation and children. Once again, the array of presentations was tantalising, but highlights for me included Svenja Wurm on the translation of movie subtitles, Javier Muñoz-Basols on the translation of sound-based humour, Jorge Braga Riera on drama translation, Claudia Böttger on Ernst Cassirer and translation, Dorota Gutfeld on the Polish translation of sci-fi and fantasy, Elin Sütiste on semiotics and translation, and of course our own Annette Schiller who gave a fascinating account of the localization of Irish and Swiss chocolatier websites. However, this was really only the tip of the iceberg and does not do justice to the wide range of stimulating research on offer.

The conference drew to a close on Saturday evening with the third and final plenary lecture - a highly original talk by Kate Sturge from Aston University on translation and the ethnographic museum. This was followed by a closing speech by Gideon Toury, in which he paid tribute to the many interesting presentations. Delegates then retired to the Irish Writers' Centre for the post-conference reception (for photos of which, see the link below).

All in all the event was deemed to have been a huge success and it is very much hoped that what is now growing to be a tradition will be continued in 2006.

For those of you who would like a taste of some of the papers presented at the both last year's and this year's conferences, keep an eye on the development of the new on-line journal in which many of the contributions will be published: New Voices in Translation Studies (www.iatis.org/newvoices) - another DCU initiative (this time in collaboration with the International Association of Translation and Intercultural Studies).

The conference website is still available at <http://www.ctts.dcu.ie/pg-conference.htm>

Crossing: Language & Ethnicity among Adolescents by Ben Rampton

Pb. £19.99, inc. of postage and packing
384 pp. April 2005

<http://www.stjerome.co.uk/encounters/1-900650-77-0.html>

This is a new and enlarged edition of Ben Rampton's ground-breaking study of sociolinguistic processes in urban youth culture. It focuses on language crossing, the use of Panjabi by adolescents of African-Caribbean and Anglo descent, the use of Creole by adolescents with Panjabi and Anglo backgrounds, and the use of stylised Indian English. Its central question is: how far and in what ways do these intricate processes of language sharing and exchange help to overcome race stratification and contribute to a new sense of mixed youth, class and neighbourhood community?

Ben Rampton produces detailed ethnographic and interactional analyses of spontaneous speech data, and integrates the discussion of particular incidents with theories of discourse, code-switching, social movements, resistance and ritual drawn from sociolinguistics, sociology, anthropology and cultural studies. Vivid descriptions of adolescent life in youth clubs and school playgrounds provide an important insight into the ways in which young people manage to live with difference, and full consideration is given to crossing's critical implications for education policy.
